Oficina de Vida Independiente (OVI)

¿Qué es la Oficina de vida independiente?

La Oficina de Vida Independiente (OVI) es un programa de la Comunidad de Madrid, gestionado por ASPAYM Madrid y cofinanciado por el Fondo Social Europeo. Fue la primera OVI en abrir sus puertas (en junio de 2006) y es la más grande de sus características.

Las y los participantes del programa disponen de la Asistencia Personal necesaria para desarrollar sus proyectos de vida. Esta Asistencia Personal se presta bajo la filosofía de Vida Independiente: son las personas con diversidad funcional participantes del programa las que auto-gestionan todo lo relativo a su Asistencia Personal. Desde la determinación de cuáles son las necesidades de apoyo, quienes las van a cubrir, qué tareas, horarios y de qué forma... Todos estos aspectos recaen sobre las y los participantes que se convierten, así, en los auténticos protagonistas de su propia vida.

Existen unos requisitos de acceso al programa de forma que si eres una persona con diversidad funcional física, mayor de edad, tienes cualquier valoración dentro del Sistema de Atención a la Dependencia, alguna actividad (trabajo o estudio), estas comprometida con la filosofía de Vida Independiente y quieres tomar el control de tu propia vida... ponte en contacto con

YES, WE FUCK!

World Health Organization (WHO):
Over a billion people are estimated to live with some form of disability. This corresponds to about 15% of the world's population.

World Health Organization (WHO):
Disabilities: an umbrella term, covering impairments, activity limitations, and participation restrictions. [...] participation restriction is a problem experienced by an individual in involvement in life situations. Disability is thus not just a health problem. It is a complex phenomenon, reflecting the interaction between features of a person's body and features of the society in which he or she lives.”

Health topics

Disabilities

Disabilities is an umbrella term, covering impairments, activity limitations, and participation restrictions. An impairment is a problem in body function or structure; an activity limitation is a difficulty encountered by an individual in executing a task or action; while a participation restriction is a problem experienced by an individual in involvement in life situations.

Disability is thus not just a health problem. It is a complex phenomenon, reflecting the interaction between features of a person's body and features of the society in which he or she lives. Overcoming the difficulties faced by people with disabilities requires interventions to remove environmental and social barriers.

People with disabilities have the same health needs as non-disabled people – for immunization, cancer screening etc. They also may experience a narrower margin of health, both because of poverty and social exclusion, and also because they may be vulnerable to secondary conditions, such as pressure sores or urinary tract infections. Evidence suggests that people with disabilities face barriers in accessing the health and rehabilitation services they need in many settings.

Adaptation for “special needs”

According to this logic, this specific part of the population is one of the groups seen as dependents on assistance. On the other hand, the necessities of the rest of the population –the so-called productive people– are normalized and naturalized turn the attention to the so-called able-bodies their dependency is hidden or invisible by the structure that supports them, which is taken for granted

food, home, vestments, genetic legacy, psychologic support and desire normative relationships of dependency are overshadowed in the domestic world in public spaces they seem to be inexistent, since ableist infrastructures in the cities are naturalized as the best options for society who can't access them, get more and more enclosed in their homes or places we've arranged to feel safe and comfortable, and in some cases, the difficulty of finding an accessible home will force many to live in institutions.

public space as a battlefield the situation of exception that some bodies are made to experience, not because of the difficulty of building shared, communal, accessible spaces, but because the institutions insist on forgetting certain kinds of bodies and instead treat them with difference

If going as a visitor is complicated enough, I ask myself if these cultural institutions in general have diverse bodies in their staff and how these bodies can manage their work routine within an ableist architecture.

Why are these spaces ableist?

To build elevators is as expensive as it is to build and maintain a lot of the other infrastructure the difference being the group who benefits from these exclusionary policies. So the question should be: who do we want to support?

Covid's interpersonal distance
space wheelchairs always require in a room

7 things Oyirum hates about being disabled:

- people look at you all the time;
- people believe you always have to thank them for their support;
- they push you to be inspiring;
- people display a paternalistic behavior and see you as asexual;
- no emergency procedures;
- no plans b
- the ever present small spaces which bodies belong to the new-normativity?

But, strictly speaking, can someone answer affirmatively that she/he/they are independent? Behind a glass of water there are thousands of people holding it. Drinking it with your own hands or with those of the personal assistant, is the difference between 10,000 hands and 10,001, and therefore that should not be as relevant. Independence is a fantasy, an optical illusion created by a social system so complexly articulated to satisfy the daily needs of those who operate in a standard way, that the dense mesh of products and services that make it possible are made invisible by the mythological idea of the self-sufficient individual. We all depend on everybody, we all contribute to everything, nobody lives “on their own”, interdependence is the only real thing, it is impossible to be without the others.

where my decisions are taking harmoniously with my surroundings

"freedom" of movement and access when i ride my bike mediation

reading; exploration modes less inclined to using social media so often the privilege of travelling, moving across national borders, moving around, not being denied access spent energy according to its spontaneously felt level without fear of worsening in a unconscious way, I relate autonomy to freedom would stand for freedom agency to actualize all the potentials I embody, not to be restrained from what I can do or whom I can become when I decide what I will do, what I will eat, wear, and I am able to exercise these desires i always read autonomy in reference to its greek meaning of self-rule and creating ones own laws seems unlikely!

'Feel' as distinct from actually being autonomou is needed individually, but usually overrated as a single mother, the few moments where I feel „autonomous“ they are actually enabled by - and are dependend on - the care-work that others perform in my place autonomous being is not isolated from the group, he just builds autonomy in the relations with his surroundings.

autonomy

I don't believe in pure autonomy independent from all thew things surrounding me the absence of any caring responsibility as a more autonomous way of living, where the interdependence does not become to crucial as in direct care-relationships autonomy and dependence cannot be thought separetly, they are interconnected autonomy and dependency are not exclusive. they can be combined. a communion of interests and positions can be based on interdependency, mutualism.

it doesn't have to be an opposition between autonomous individualism and dependent collectivities/ hierarchies.

i am not a huge fan of the term 'autonomy', the feminist understanding that we are all interdependent, albeit to different degrees. plus anxiety, loss of control, loss of freedom to do what I feel is right/desired without needing anyone elses approval... especially when the reasons for a loss of autonomy are not chosen anxious and frustrated. my joy of living decreases and that makes me very motionless and dull.

living in a community, sharing work and living space to some extent have to ask for something

- autonomy

even though the autonomy and dependency are interconnected, the degrees of interconnection vary. When I see mothers with several small children, they husbands out and about most of the day, thats what I would consider a less autonomous „lifestyle“ than my own... and it gives me anxiety to only think about it.

it can be good and it can be bad.
depends on which kind of autonomy.

anger, frustration,
sadness

rage

i just had an operation, that was very difficult for me, because i needed people to take care of me - go shopping, cook... i felt very dependent and really had difficulties with that fact/feeling

i am really quite far up in an imagined hierarchy of less or more...

loss of self,
horror of me falling apart

dealing with bureaucracy in Germany!

environment, material and immaterial conditions that have agency both to restrain and to reveal my potentials geographical borders

In a unconscious way, I relate dependence on prison

as a privileged and mobile person I would be anxious to lose the liberties I have aquired weakness

financial or other support for my daily life have to wait for other people for anything

- answers, food,
timing, lines, service, anything

dependency relationship between the individual and another being / thing, in which it is impossible to continue existing without the presence / action of this other precariousness

when i feel precarious in my work or in my economy

I am dependent on for instance state apparatus, the national state, my citizenship rights, and capital. also on support from family and friends.

this is a difficult concept, because not-depending-on-anyone-or-anything is a very strong myth for me.
